The inventions described in claims 1 to 8, 11, and 12 do not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 to 3.

Document 1 discloses a feature wherein fibrous surface fasteners comprising a mesh-type unit having an interval between warp threads of 0.7 to 1.3 mm, an interval between weft threads of 1.5 to 1.8 mm, and a basis weight of 25.0 to 34.0 g/m² are measured using a specified noise-measuring method, and the item having the least unpleasant peel-off sound is utilized.

Further, documents 2 and 3 disclose the observation of acoustic spectra on which Fourier transform has been performed as a method for measuring noise.

Moreover, the question of what sort of method to adopt as a noise-measuring method is merely a feature fittingly determined at the discretion of a person skilled in the art, and thus, in order to adopt a fibrous surface fastener having a peel-off sound that is not unpleasant as the fibrous surface fastener disclosed in document 1, a person skilled in the art could easily conceive of optimizing the surface fastener by observing acoustic spectra that have undergone Fourier transform, as disclosed in documents 2 and 3.

The invention described in claim 9 does not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 to 3 and document 4.

Document 4 discloses the provision of a gap-forming means for forming a gap between a surface fastener base material and an item on which the fastener is to be mounted.

The invention described in claim 10 does not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 to 3 and document 5.

Document 5 discloses the provision of a damping means between the rear surface of a base part on which the locking elements of a surface fastener stand and an item on which the fastener is to be mounted.
